Case Study:

WorkingSm@rt® at Autodesk

Background

"It's clear the world is changing, and the way we do our work is changing."

This is the statement that Carl Bass used to kick off the General Session at Autodesk University 2009, noting design engineers are facing tremendous global competition and pressure to work more efficiently.

Shortly after being named President and CEO of Autodesk, Carl Bass, previously COO, recognized that a significant amount of time was being eaten up in meetings. This situation was costing valuable time and effort that didn't provide return on investment. Mr Bass directed that meetings be improved immediately.

Challenge to Priority Management

Autodesk was a client of Priority Management; using both Priority Manager, the paper based system and Working Sm@rt® using Microsoft Outlook. They liked Priority's process and method for meetings used in Priority Manager, but wanted a more in-depth course. They challenged Priority to improve meetings training that had been part of Priority Manager for 30 years. They wanted their meetings to:

- Be effective and well planned
- provide value for time invested
- have accountable results

Priority Management Solution

Priority Management had a strong working relationship with Autodesk and saw the potential. They researched and analyzed the components of effective meetings, applying Autodesk's slogan, "See why design matters". A well designed meeting produces the desired result.

Priority took their proven process, refined and developed it, to create WorkingSm@rt® in Meetings.

Priority Management worked with Autodesk in Alpha and Beta testing, resulting in more than 600 Autodesk managers being trained in New Hampshire, Chicago, and San Rafael.
